The curl in the gob of a scolding wife, The purse in the petticoat he cant fill, And the nagging tongue that is never titt. Three things strong and the house is blest: The table, the fire, and the hand to a guest. Three sounds of increase: a lowing cow, The smithy sparks, the swish of a plow. Three are the tokens of goodly drest: Elegance, comfort, and lastingness. Three hands and the world its best will yield: The hand in the smithy, the byre, and the field. What sneed is needed right away; Don tcut the scollops on a windy day. The back of my hand to her at the door Who never adds weight to the poor mans store. The same to him on his chair all day That jabbers and gabs with nothing to say. To all: Be patient and good and kind, And leave a name that will live behind. It was thus he spoke, the Rachary Wor, A man of substance and goodly store; And he left his holding, his hearth, and home, And they buried him deep in the graveyard loam. They carried him there one Lammastide, And its seventeen years past since he died. Still they pray for him now as they did of yore, For the soul of the good man Rachary Wor.
