Being a parent can be one of the most amazing and wonderful adventures a person can experience. But it's not always easy. Sometimes the hardest part of being a new parent is not knowing what your little bundle wants or is trying to tell you. At this very moment, millions of moms and dads across the globe stare blankly at their screaming baby thinking, "What does this child want? Pleeese, just tell me!?"

And while the initial months will most likely be challenging due to a lack of communication, the constant searching for what your baby desires does not need to last long. Yes, certain children will take longer than others to start speaking, but through some simple techniques and guided encouragement, many children can gain the confidence and desire to speak sooner.

"Wouldn't it be great if little Sam could tell us he's hungry, wants his pacifier, craves an apple, thinks the bath is too cold, wishes to play with the puppy or ball, needs a glass of water, or simply wants more of something?? We watched countless friends and colleagues asking these and similar questions about their 7 month, 9 month, 12 month, 16 month, and 18 month olds. Fellow parents would look bewildered as our 1-year old would read off alphabet letters, name body parts, ask for cheese and yogurt, call for his sister, point to and exclaim "Buddha?", or ask to watch Elmo. "How did you get your child to speak so fast? My 1½ year old just says "dada".?

After enough of these comments and requests, the authors decided to share their secrets. This book contains the author's research, feedback, experiments, training and education simplified into an easy-to-follow, fun guide to help your child communicate. As well, the techniques within can assist in bringing children up to speed who may be taking longer than normal to begin speaking.

Prior to public release, the book has been reviewed, edited and endorsed by child experts including Speech Therapists, Psychiatrists, Pediatricians, Psychologists, Therapists, Teachers, Parents, and others.
