Climate Change Adaptation for Health and Social Services

This book pulls together evidence and experience about what needs to be done in local communities to support and protect the people in Australia most vulnerable to the current impacts of climate change. The authors explore adaptation issues and actions relevant now and over the next 5–10 years, discussing the experiences different populations have of climate impacts and the evidence defining their adaptation issues and actions. The book will provide expertise from a range of researchers and NGOs, and will assist community-based health and social service organizations across Australia to think about their clients, communities, the organizations and their programs.
