found two paperbacks at work, both thrillers, both written by women, both part of a series, both having a two word title starting with the word "Blind". After reading five chapters of one, I skimmed to the back to make sure the good guys all survived, and gave up. The other kept me hooked to the end. The one that kept me hooked was Catherine Coulter's "Blind Side." This book has two major plot lines. In order of appearance, they deal with a serial killer of math teachers, and the abduction of 6 year old Sam Kettering. In reality, there is no balance between the two. The kidnapping takes up the major part of the book. The serial killer story has minimal development, and is solved in a way that I found less than satisfying. (In fact, at one point, I wondered if it would be resolved in this story.)
